After Clays' mission, he came back to settle down at home, hope to lead a peaceful, normal country boy's life. But it was not long un- his country needed him. Clay inlisted, he joined Utah's own 145th Field Artillery Unit. (Taps is heard played in the background as Kyle is spoken on the stage with flood lights, standing in Clay's old uniform.)

After the intense training of this unit, he was transferred to Officers Training School in the United States Air Force and sent to California. He became a Lieutenant and pilot, and served as such until the end of World War I.

Returning home after the war, he again took up his place as a father citizen and stockman. As a duty to his community, he joined the Heber Volunteer Fire Department and served three years with this fine group.
